NARRATIVE ANALYSIS:

Dominant Narrative

The dominant narrative emerging from the Instagram comments revolves around the casting choices for an adaptation of popular books, particularly the decision to cast Blake Lively as a lead character. Many users express their dissatisfaction with this choice, labeling it detrimental to the film's overall quality and their excitement. Comments such as "Blake lively was the worst choice for lily anyways" (with 4,890 likes) reflect a strong consensus that Lively's portrayal is perceived as a significant misstep, overshadowing other aspects of the project. The involvement of Colleen Hoover, presumably the author of the original material, is also scrutinized, indicating a broader concern about the adaptation's fidelity to its source material.

Sentiment Analysis

The sentiment across the comments is overwhelmingly negative, with Blake Lively and Colleen Hoover receiving notably low sentiment scores of -0.455 and -0.325, respectively. High engagement with comments that express disappointment and anger—such as "She ruined it" and "shame on you Coleen"—suggests that fans feel a strong emotional investment in the integrity of the adaptation. The negative sentiment is largely driven by perceived betrayals of the original narrative and character relatability, with users attributing blame to both Lively and Hoover for their choices. This sentiment highlights a collective frustration among fans who feel let down by their expectations.

Discussion Topics

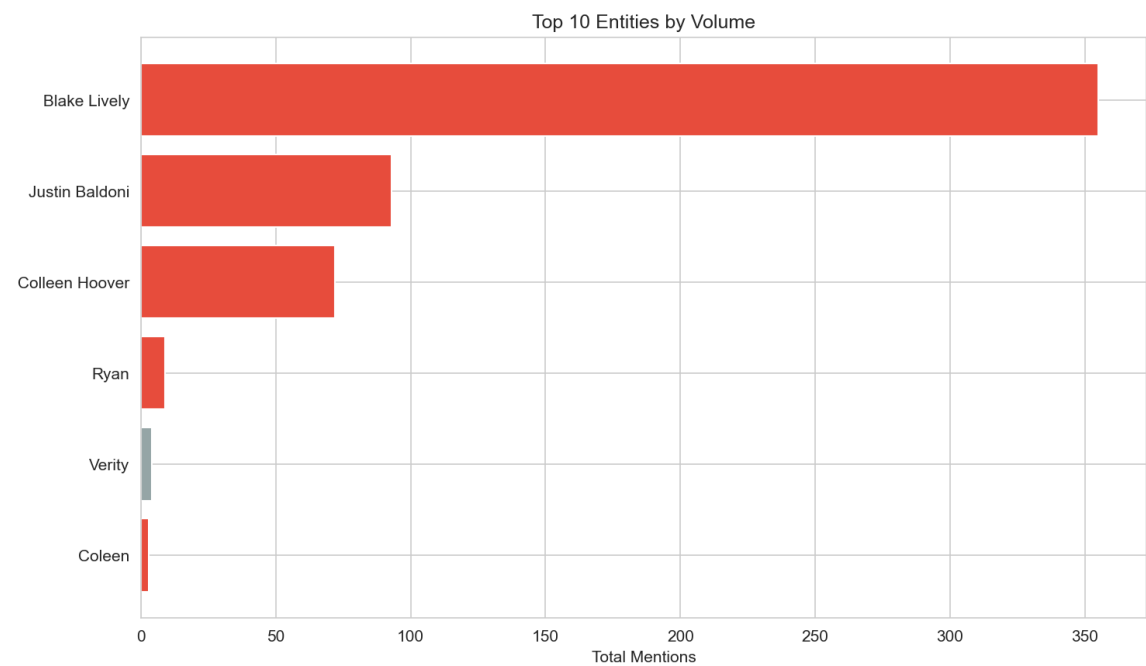

The comments reveal a clear focus on the casting decision and its implications for the film's quality and authenticity. Users are not merely critiquing Lively's performance but are also questioning Hoover's judgment and involvement in the casting process. This is encapsulated in comments like "Not for the book, for your choices in real life," which indicates that the critique extends beyond the cinematic adaptation to the authorship and decision-making of Hoover herself. Additionally, there is a notable mention of Justin Baldoni, who is viewed more favorably by some commenters, suggesting that there is a desire for authenticity and professionalism in the casting that they feel was lacking.

Emerging Patterns

High-engagement comments exhibit a pattern of blaming key figures—especially Lively and Hoover—while expressing a longing for a more faithful representation of beloved characters. The use of emotionally charged language, such as "she destroyed what once made her relatable," reflects a deep-seated sense of betrayal among fans. Additionally, the top emotions expressed in the comments, primarily anger and disappointment, align with the negative sentiment scores associated with the mentioned entities. This pattern
